REPORT

REUSES OF WASTE

The next best option to reducing solid waste altogether is to reuse as many items as possible. Reuse can mean purchasing non-disposable items or it can mean passing an item along to another person for continued use. So, rather than using paper towels to clean the house, you use a washable rag; and, instead of throwing out the clothes or toys your children have outgrown, you pass them along to a neighbor, charity or church.

One organization that is built on the concept of reuse is Freecycle. Waste Management is a partner with Freecycle, an online network where members give away and get items for free in their own communities - rather than filling up our landfills with gently used items, find someone else in your community who could put it to good use!

Recycling is one of the 3 R's, reduce, reuse, and recycle, which aims at promoting sustainable living. Recycling refers to when we convert something which can be considered waste into a new product. For example, when you buy a plastic bottle of water, you can send it to recycling centers to be made into something like plastic bags rather than throwing it away. Recycling is one of the most important waste management practices, and it is essential to follow for sustainable living.

Recycling is very important for saving the Earth. Reusing, reducing, and recycling are the three important R's that we must follow to help our planet be healthy. Recycling means to take the raw materials of objects and remake them into new objects which we can use again.

Humans produce lots of waste every day, including paper, plastic, metal, and glass waste. This means used water bottles or soft drinks bottles and cans, waste paper, old jars and bottles which are made of glass, etc. These are some things which can be easily recycled in special recycling centers. Over there, these things are broken into small pieces, melted, then put back together as a brand new and usable object.
